

We began 2016 with some very interesting articles on the international press.

Here we share the most relevant:

Andrew Jefford, "For the love of limestone". Decanter Magazine, UK.

The British journalist describes the adventure of the Altos Las Hormigas team making wine in Cahors, France. In an interview with Antonio Morescalchi, he digs into the story that made the creation of the wines Causse du Théron, Causse des Ons and Causse du Vidot possible.

Eric Asimov, "To Move Beyond Malbec, Look Below the Surface". The New York Times, USA.

This complete article highlights the efforts of the Altos Las Hormigas team that, along with terroir-specialist Pedro Parra, work on discovering the best soils to express their unique characteristics on each of our wines. To read the full article, please click here.

We also received in our winery the recognized British wine journalist Tim Atkin, MW.

He joined our winemaker Leonardo Erazo to taste the most recent vintages of our wines.

Tim showed true interest in the latest news about our Terroir Project, and the work of delimitation of the areas with higher presence of limestone that the team of Altos las Hormigas has been carrying out.

We look forward to this year's "Argentina Report", with Tim's comments on our winery and wines.

We are anticipating the harvest, waiting for the grapes to achieve their optimum ripeness level to start picking them up. The current weather in Mendoza will make 2016 a definitely atypical year. Taking good care of the vines, following closely the evolution of the grapes, will be fundamental to have a harvest with healthy grapes, which can turn into great, elegant and different wines... wines with the potential to be extraordinary.
